

Living in an area with very few radio choices, I have truly enjoyed the large variety satellite radio has to offer. I would hate to think that this is going to be a service that I could lose simply because standard stations cannot keep up with the programming that satellite radio offers. Like any other market, there is competition. If the radio stations want more listeners and feel threatened by this marvelous service (that satellite radio is offering), let them rise to the challenge.

I feel that the FCC probably has more important issues to deal with than helping local radio stations (and their parent companies) dominate the market as they have for so long.

This service is long overdue and will continue to receive my support and I hope that you will realize its contribution in the market.
